A: Create a base class for both forms and have the form inherit it. Then you would have a property called User and pass that in to your derived classes. The base class would also store your username. A: Form2 p = new Form2(); p.Username = "xxxxx"; p.Show(); This would give you access to the user name in Form2 Gorilla Food Gorillas have a wide range of foods that they eat. While they do eat almost every part of the plant, the animals are mostly vegetarian. The vegetarian diet is mainly composed of leaves, bark, fruit and flowers, supplemented by food from insects and small vertebrates. Only a few grams of plant material are required each day, usually consisting of the first two or three leaves. Fruit Tropical rainforests of the equatorial region have the greatest diversity of fruit species. One of the most preferred food types for gorillas is heart of palm or coconut palm fruits, which generally develop on land that is in the forest canopy. Other preferred fruits include banana, cashew, fig, jackfruit, papaya, plantain, pawpaw, quince and star fruit. Insects Gorillas also feed on insects, an important part of the diet of the gorilla in the wild. Vertebrates Gorillas also feed on small vertebrates, often of a similar size to themselves. Commonly eaten animals include lizards, snakes, frogs, young birds and newborn rodents. Fats Gorillas commonly eat a high proportion of fats, particularly in the fruit that they consume.
